

Global Social Transformation

All of us, as a society, are witnessing an extraordinary historical transition between the Industrial Age and the Information -- or Digital Age.

When a society's fundamental technologies change and its economy begins to transform, the political and social institutions inevitably follow.

In this new era, nothing will be as important as education. The current educational systems of the developed world -- suited to the requirements of the masses of the Industrial Age -- is becoming obsolete. We, and our children, need to be prepared.

With multimedia personal computers, learning will become interactive and individualized.

The man-in-the-street and politicians alike are asking the same questions -- where are we and where are we going?
